

Jesse White

SECRETARY OF STATE

NEWS

For Immediate Release:

November 8, 2005

For More Information Contact:

Pat McGuckin

Randy Nehrt

WHITE ANNOUNCES WINNERS OF EMERGING WRITERS COMPETITION

SPRINGFIELD—Secretary of State and State Librarian Jesse White today congratulated the winners of the first annual Illinois Emerging Writers Competition, an award White has created to promote writing and creativity and to provide a unique opportunity and outlet for recognizing new talent.

This year's category was poetry, and the three winners are:

- Rosanna Lloyd of Chicago for her piece Summertime Trilogy
- Elliot R. Mandel of Glen Ellyn for his poem in the middle of Nosomewhere or on the road with the bradley university chorale, spring tour 2002
- Joseph Woods of Park Forest for his work Black Goes With Everything

Illinois poet laureate Kevin Stein served as a judge for the contest and presented the awards during a ceremony at the Illinois State Library in Springfield.

"I am pleased to congratulate these three extremely talented individuals, who were among 124 entries we received during this inaugural event," White said. "My goal in creating this competition was to provide a new outlet for Illinois literary talent, and I believe the large number of entries submitted helped us achieve that goal. Our state has such a long and rich history of producing outstanding writers, and I hope all of those persons who entered will continue writing and inspiring us with their works."

The three winners each received a $300 cash prize and a plaque recognizing their achievement. Winning poems will be submitted for possible publication in Ninth Letter Magazine, Another Chicago Magazine and Rhino Magazine.

The Emerging Writers Competition is a joint venture of the Illinois Center for the Book, for which White serves as Honorary Chairman, and the Illinois State Library.

The Illinois Center for the Book, an affiliate of the Center for the Book in the Library of Congress, is a non-profit organization promoting books, book arts, libraries and reading in Illinois. Established in 1985, the organization's mission is to celebrate the printed word and to create an environment that promotes reading, the book arts and an appreciation of the state's rich literary heritage.

###

(Copies of the winning poems are attached.)

Elliot R. Mandel

in the middle of Nosomewhere or on the road with the bradley university chorale, spring tour 2002

in the middle of Nosomewhere

or at least, between the mississippi and the rockies, or more practically, between the last concert and the next,

is space:

the sun has room enough to make whole shadows of clouds upon terrain known as kansas where a continuous yet flimsy wire-woodenpost fence guides the two-lane highway supporting a greyhound going one way and a peoria charter going the other.

make no mistake, we're not settlers on this western prairie we're not staying long enough, and some of us aren't even awake.

chin rests on knuckles, shoulder smushes against window, eyes watching the land stand still; after all, it's the bus (with me inside) that does the flying by.

"american" doesn't describe the landscape; this space sitting blurringly still isn't kansas, you don't cross a line into colorado.

this part of america is defined not by the presence of people, but by the wind that carves, whistling its song of ghostly vastness over dried-up streams dead-grass-golden hills the backs of benevolent bovine skimming the tumbleweed along...

glancing up from out, now approaching the golden arches of metropolis, it sometimes wears an arby's hat promising intestinal havoc;

this is american landscape, so is the train out there that classically parallels the road.

the distinctive american stamp:

any town with nine or more people has a baseball field.

there is also farmland, both meat and wheat and occasional proof that rickety windmills still creak in the prairie breeze, but are the only wild animals the silhouetted birds V-sweeping the sky?

as the edge of the road—pavement and grass—smears along the bottom of my window, a feathery dark mass seizes my stare.

the regal hawk puffs out his chest subtly poised in a tree's mid-march skeleton surveying the vista, ruler of everything his eye pierces unflinchingly oblivious to the concrete arteries pumping people empowered by sedans.

if the years did 75 down a lonely highway, this bus and those cars passed the people we inaccurately dub "indians"

("native americans" in a spasm of political correctness) a long ways back;

as a matter of fact, we left 'em drunk off our dust.

time and driving fade the silver spur motel into the rusty spur saloon outside a colony of crumbling ranch shanties.

some were promised paint jobs, others knew they'd survive without 'em.

a grove of trees sprouts on the horizon soon dusk will drive seamlessly into dark and the grove will go with it, and in another hour, the color on the other side of the window will begin to look like the underside of my eyelids.

Joseph Woods

*To My Mother Doris,
Who Knitted My Pattern Of Thought,
With Grandma's Hands,*

Black Goes With Everything

Tommy Hilfiger,
Didn't make his clothes,
For the Black figure,
Yet you eye it,
Buy it,
Incomplete without it,
Does it make you feel,
Bigger, badder, better,
Or does it attract,
An hourglass figure,

Go figure,

Fubu,
The designer guru,
Who got the best of you,
For it and its kind knew,
What was most important to you,
An appearance,
That won't get you clearance,
To the celestial club,
The one the prophets spoke of,

You see,
Nike seeped into your psyche,
Thus psyched thee,
Into opening your mentality,
And with audacity,
Made its own key,
But I ain't mad at you,
Mikey,

Forgive me,
But I never gave,
Amazed praise,
To the days glazed,
With worship ways,
To Izod,

Instead of,
My God,

Fila's fiat fantasies,
Failed to fulfill me,
Do you feel me?
Do you feel me?

Descending tommy hills,
Hence ascending,
To a greater part of me,
The part of me,
You don't see,
My link to immortality,
Declaring,
Not wardrobe,
But peacedrobe,
The clothes to my soul...

I got,
Langston Hughes shoes,
With a Nat King Cole sole,
And Stevie Wonder wingtips, Redd Foxx socks,
And Paul Robeson pants, Pressed with a Malcolm crease,
And Sidney Poitier pleats,
All held up with a Muhammad Ali championship belt,

I got,
A Frederick Douglass dress shirt,
With Martin Luther King cufflinks, And Belafonte buttons,
A Jackie Robinson jacket, With Satchel Paige pockets,
A Bojangles bow tie,
And Coltrane coattails,

And when I feel,
Like there ain't nothing I can't do,
I wear my Shaka Zulu zoot suit,
And as I take,
That slow soul stroll,
Down Countee Cullom's Heritage Avenue,
Spicy Grove,
Cinnamon Tree,

With a solstice soul kiss,
My soul mate greets me...

Draped in a Dorothy Dandridge dress, Made of Sarah Vaughn silk,
And Nancy Wilson satin, Styling a Mahalia manicure, Precious Lord Take My Hand,
And a Billie Holiday hairdo,

She's got,
A Minnie Ripperton minnie skirt, Stitched with Harriet Tubman thread,
And woven with Phillis Wheatly wool,
A Rosa Parks pair of Sorjourner Truth boots, Tammy Terrell tights,
A Tina Turner tank top,

She wears a Pamela Greer shear brassiere,
And a Dianne Carroll corset, That shines with the eloquence,
Of that Diana Ross gloss,

And when she takes me,
To the higher place,
Love,
To the superlative case,
She wears Cleopatra panties, Trimmed with Lena Horne lace,

Oh Those Old Souls That Sewed My Soul,

With needlework wisdom,
They embroidered examples,
Knitted knowledge,
Macramed minds,
Quilted quotes,
And hemmed hopes,

tommy molehill,
About nothing,
You are much ado,
Donning your red,
White,
And blue,
It was never really about you,
Go Figure

Rosanna Lloyd

Summertime Trilogy

June:

Pray for a Chocolate Wind as I sit on the front stoop the tannery spreads its sickly sweet odor along the river and into my neighborhood it smells like baby powder and burning skin if you don't breathe too deep you can only smell the baby powder but if you breathe like that for too long you'll pass out for sure my only hope for peace is a southeasterly wind coming from the chocolate factory

July:

The Slow Death of the Ice Cream Man

I can hear the ice cream van far away, getting closer the twinkling clown song distorted by a heavy July wind, tunneling through the thick air into my screened window I always picture it in a swarm of children but when it rolls by my house it's always alone the song is sharp and painful and the man behind the chicken-wired windows looks like he hates ice cream

August:

Child of the Future the air is heavy with particles of industry the street bristles with mechanical flora the ground is coated with brazenly colored food packaging material I haven't set foot off pavement for days my bike wheels churn the debris beneath me and a sudden wind pushes my hair to the side with the heavy perfume of the chocolate factory I turn my face into the wind I breathe deep some people call it ugly

I call it progress

I want a fast train I want to call people while I'm on it

I want to buy shrunken heads on ebay

I want to see five movies at the same multiplex

I want to play dance dance revolution in between them

I want the internet in my head a hard drive in my temporal lobe

I want a hormone cocktail in my milk

I want to donate my eggs to science for money

I want a goddamn flying car

I just want to ride this wave of invention until it crashes

if it ever does copper sunlight filters through the dust and I turn the corner at the light on the street

a dead pigeon with its skull flattened its face stuck to the sidewalk the eyes gone like one of those feathery halloween masks